The Ten Commandments (1956) [English Subtitle] [FULL Reviews: "The Ten Commandments is 1955-1956 film that stars Charlton Heston as Moses, a shepherd raised by the widow of Pharaoh's general and raised (much less happily) to be the chosen prophet of God. The film was adapted from the Book of Exodus in Exodus 20. The film was produced by Cecil B. DeMille, who also produced many of his own films, but this time he co-wrote the screenplay with his wife, Ruth Rose, and he directed. Although some have tried to say this was their first screenplay, their previous film was called Satan's Sister. In many ways the film is a faith-filled, epic tale with many elements of romance and adventure and the struggles of one man's life and death. It also has many anachronisms. These are because Cecil B. DeMille was a perfectionist and wanted it so. This film is a saga of faith, courage and love. The narrative is thorough and complete and runs with enthusiasm and humour. Charlton Heston plays Moses as God's chosen prophet with a strong and enduring personality. The other cast of characters perform strongly. Although at times the narrative is a little unclear, there are many enough twist and turns to keep the story going even if you have no knowledge of Exodus 20." (Niles Stover) "The Ten Commandments is a great film. "The Ten Commandments" is a 1955 remake of Cecil B. deMille's "The Ten Commandments," released in 1923. It follows a strong narrative, strong acting, and a consistently well-paced story line. The film carries many influences, but its major influence is the Book of Exodus. It follows the story of Moses, who serves as the prophet for the Jewish people. Moses lives as a shepherd in Egypt, where he has grown up in the house of a Jewish peasant named Jochebed. He is regarded as a nobody in the house, but he is widely appreciated for his strength and intelligence. After the death of Jochebed's husband, Moses, who is of the priestly caste, is raised as a prince in the home of the Egyptian nobleman and general, Shemih. At Shemih's death, Moses goes to the nobleman's son, the pharaoh. The pharaoh places Moses in charge of a team of charioteers to drive his chariot in the horse races, in which Moses loses
